Endarch:
Journal of Black Political Research

Endarch: Journal of Black Political Research is a double blind peer-reviewed journal published by the Clark Atlanta University Department of Political Science in partnership with the Atlanta University Center Robert Woodruff Library. The journal is an online publication that seeks to reflect, analyze, and generate activity, which will ultimately lead toward the expansion, clarification, and solidification of Black political thought. For this purpose, the journal publishes articles that report original investigations and contribute new scholarship to the field of political science.

The journal relies on a graduate student run editorial board as well as expert reviewers. The editorial offices are located in Knowles Hall on the Campus of Clark Atlanta University. First published by graduate students in the Atlanta University Department of Political Science as Endarch: Journal of Political Theory in the Fall of 1974, the journal has helped to develop the scholarly pursuits of countless editorial board members, submitters, and others as they shaped the national and international dialogue around Black political research.

Articles submitted may be in the form of comparative analyses, case studies, or may focus on theory or theory construction. The journal maintains a rolling deadline for submissions. Manuscripts may be submitted to the editors electronically at Endarchjournal@cau.edu or via regular mail, though electronic submissions are strongly encouraged and greatly appreciated. Manuscripts submitted via e-mail should take the form of attachments formatted in Microsoft Word and should be e-mailed to Endarchjournal@cau.edu. Once accepted for publication, manuscripts must be submitted electronically.

For any questions or comments pertaining to submissions please contact the journal via email at EndarchJournal@cau.edu or by phone at 404-880-8718.
