

Guest Editor

Celucien L. Joseph, PhD (University of Texas at Dallas) is an Assistant Professor of English at Indian River State College. Professor Joseph is an interdisciplinary scholar, researcher, and educator. He is interested in the intersections of history, race, religion, theology, literature, and the history of ideas. His academic research and teaching interests include American and African-American Literature; African American Cultural and Intellectual History; Francophone Studies: Africa and the Caribbean; Anglophone Caribbean Literature; Comparative Afro-Caribbean Studies: History and Literature; Comparative Literature of the African Diaspora; Black Internationalism; Postcolonial and Critical Theory; Race and Religion; Pragmatic Religious Naturalism; Postcolonial Theology and Biblical Hermeneutics; African Religions in the Diaspora; African American Religion; Liberation and Constructive Theologies.

Professor Joseph is a Board member of The Journal of Pan African Studies for the French speaking audience. He is regular conference speaker at the National Council for Black Studies. He has contributed scholarly articles in the Journal of Black Studies, The Journal of Pan African Studies, Journal of Race, Ethnicity, and Religion, Journal of Postcolonial Networks, Theology Today, Journal of Postcolonial Theory and Theology, Toronto Theology Journal.

Dr. Joseph is the author of four books: From Toussaint to Price-Mars: Rhetoric, Race, and Religion in Haitian Thought (2013), Haitian Modernity and Liberative Interruptions: Discourse on Race, Religion, Freedom (2014), and God Loves Haiti: A Short Overview of Hope for Today Outreach (2015). His forthcoming book is called Thinking in Public: Faith, Secular Humanism, and Development in Jacques Roumain (Wipf and Stock Publishers, 2015).